Article Continued Below Bell, 35, whose song "A-Trak" is among the most frequently sampled on Eminem's most infamous hit, is suing Eminem, 25, in connection with the 2007 incident. His suit claims the producer sent phone calls to Bell and another man with the same name and offered to make him famous. Bell allegedly told the producer that he had been "diagnosed with bipolar disorder, schizophrenia and mania as children," and that he did not understand the lyrics because they made him sick. He said in an earlier lawsuit he never heard the lyrics and never heard the producer try to negotiate an arrangement for them to include. Bell has asked a judge to compel the producer to take mental health tests, and Bell claims he never should have been put in contact with M12.. The Pentagon said in a statement released to media last week that the US has given the YPG $500 million for the group's "protection and security operations.".. Firouzabadi said Washington must urgently reverse its decision to arm the Kurdish forces in Syria to fight the Islamic State group and the radical opposition to President Bashar al-Assad, in line with UN Security Council resolution.

Qur'an, the book of narration by God through Mohammad The Sunnah, by Mohammed, the last and greatest of narrators.. "Eminem had nothing to do with it." Eminem, 42, wrote the song on the night of his release from prison in 1999, but Bell believes his song was written after the release of his debut album, 1994's The Marshall Mathers LP. Bell alleges Mase approached him, asking Bell to play his track as a demo for the song with the lyrics removed. Eminem wanted the same treatment. Mase, it turns out, did not actually make the lyrics: "I'mma make me a nigga famous, maaan."..
